Artists Help Alameda Celebrate Important Moment of Change

Sun Staff Reports

Rhythmix Cultural Works and the City of Alameda presented Creating Our Future, a public art installation and virtual reception celebrating the renaming of Alameda's park formerly known as Jackson Park. Bringing the artist's voice to the renaming of Alameda's first park now known as Chochenyo, Rhythmix Cultural Works invited artist Stephen Bruce to curate a temporary art installation to replace the park's signage during the renaming process.

In this important moment of change, the installation brought together the work of six different African American artists, Stephen Bruce, Abi Mustapha, Andrea McCoy Harvey, Ashlei Reign, Tiffany Conway and Zoë Boston, to create a vision of our future.

City Councilmember John Knox White started a GoFundMe campaign to raise funds to acquire the artwork to donate it permanently to the City of Alameda.

Donating to this campaign will help commemorate the renaming process and support the artists who created this work through their effort to look at Alameda's history, as well as the impacts of place-names on different parts of our community, and to realign how we present this space to reflect our community's aspirations.

Defendants Return to Court to Face Homicide Charge

Ekene Ikeme

Two men charged with the alleged 2018 murder of an Alameda restaurant owner will appear in court today for their next hearing in the three-year-old case.

Donte Holloway and Paul Paez will have their disposition and setting hearing today, Aug. 19, at the Rene Davidson Alameda County Courthouse. The two men are charged with murder and other charges, for the death of Cindy Le on April 10, 2018. The two men are alleged to have assaulted and robbed Le outside the Pho Anh Dao restaurant, located at 1919 Webster St., around 11 p.m. on April 6, 2018. She died four days later.

According to online legal databaseavvo.com, a disposition setting court date will determine whether the court will set a date for trial, a guilty plea will be made or if the case will be dismissed altogether. The joint hearing for the two men is scheduled for 2 p.m.

Paez and Holloway have had numerous court dates since being arrested for Le's murder on Aug. 20, 2018. Paez has had 22 court dates, while Holloway has had 47 because he was out on parole during the night of the incident. Like many other people awaiting trial in Alameda County, Paez and Holloway had their court proceeding delayed due to the coronavirus pandemic. According to Alameda County Superior Court records, their case was delayed from March 13 to Dec. 16, 2020. The two men pled not guilty at their plea hearing on Oct. 19, 2018.

According to police reports, on the night of the attack, Paez followed Le from her restaurant she owns in Oakland to her Alameda restaurant. While she was outside the restaurant Paez tried to take Le's purse from her, and when she tried to fight him off, he punched her in the face. The punch caused her to fall to the ground and her head struck the concrete. Holloway aided in the attempted robbery and hit Le and her daughter's boyfriend, who was trying to defend Le, in the head with a metal pipe, police said. Holloway admitted to police to being at the scene and swinging the metal pipe, according to reports. The ordeal was caught on the restaurant's surveillance video.

Kuboyama Stands Out

Alameda Police Department's Lieutenant Kuboyama, left, stands with Chief Nishant Joshi. Kuboyama recently graduated from the Sherman Block Supervisory Leadership Institute. The institute offers an intensive 8-month program designed to enhance personal growth, leadership skills and ethical decision-making among California law enforcement supervisors. Kuboyama's overall dedication, outstanding performance, and thoughtful contributions to the course and his classmates led him to his selection as class speaker.

Stroll along the Estuary

On Saturday, Aug. 28, Dennis Evanosky will lead a history walking tour along the Oakland Estuary. Meet at 9 a.m. at the intersection of Fernside Boulevard and Versailles Avenue. We'll walk across the Fruitvale Bridge, along Oakland's Alameda Avenue to High Street and back to the start. Along the way, Dennis will describe how the estuary was created under the direction of Alameda's own Hermann Krusi. Pictured here is the first Fruitvale Bridge with the estuary under construction.
